COMPRENSIÓN ESCRITA (READING)

1. "Selfie" – a self-portrait taken with a mobile phone camera – is never listed as an official cause of death. But over the past two years, they have been at the centre of an increasing amount of fatal mishaps. A study recently stated that there have been at least 49 selfie-related deaths since the start of 2014. "Idiots," you may be thinking. "That would never happen to me." We hope not, but don't be too sure. Here are two examples of selfie-related deaths.
2. In January 2015, three Indian college students were struck by a train while attempting to take a selfie as close to a moving train as possible. India has a surprising selfie problem, with more of its citizens dying while snapping than any other country in the world.
3. In July 2015, a man was killed during the annual running of the bulls in Pamplona. David Lopez, aged 32, was trying to commemorate the event by taking a selfie while sprinting through the streets. López left the protected area to film a confrontation between two bulls when a third animal came and attacked him from behind.
4. Selfies may be the coolest trend on social media, but they can also endanger the lives of photographers and the people around them. So, governments around the world have now instituted public education campaigns to warn people against careless and risky selfie behaviour. India, for example, has created "no-selfie zones."
5. A team from Carnegie Mellon University is developing an app which will warn selfie takers when their quest for the ultimate photo is putting their life in danger. They hope the app will be able to identify when someone is taking a photo at a high point, by train tracks or in other dangerous situations and alert them to the possible risk to their life.
